COVID-19 has caused severe disruptions to international transactions and projects and has led many to seek relief from their contractual obligations. Do international instruments such as the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts and the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (CISG) provide relief for parties affected by COVID-19?

Force majeure certificates have been requested by parties affected by COVID-19 and issued by chambers of commerce in various countries. Do such certificates have any value in an arbitral proceeding?

How are the principles of force majeure and economic hardship treated under national laws and under public international law?

Join us for this webinar as experienced arbitration practitioners, arbitrators and law professors tackle these issues.
